- Niagara's history does not just comprise of war as suggested in class may have been to encourage dev-client communication
- How does this impact our design?

Contents

 - All historical periods and important events should be considered
 - This will boost client relations
 - Increase overall quality of product due to increased research and efforts
 - They also have interactive artifacts (can be implemented in our project)
 - Various exhibits which start from early 17th century and effects shown until present day

Timeline content

- Initial sprints will focus on main timeline which includes all historical periods and events
 - Next sprint will focus on sub-timelines (indigenous history, pre-war, transportation era, etc.)
 - The following sprint – implement greater interactivity within these sub-groups (interactive maps, exhibits, 3d models)

Key Takeaways

- Multiple exhibits to showcase Niagara's rich history
 - Single large timeline and numerous sub-timelines
 - Implement interactivity in stages (learning curve and gradual skill development)
 - Client-Developer relations focus

Next Steps

- How should we approach design and implementation
 - Are the proposed timeline ideas feasible? Any suggestions?
 - When should we meet with client?
 - Will this meeting be in person or online?
 - Should we have a single point of contact (professionalism)?
 - Any questions, concerns or suggestions?
